The a forms of pa t normally represent, according to period and dialect, the OE flēag, flēah, and the δ forms the OE flōg. The γ form are transferred from the sing from the pl and the pa pple The origin of the δ form flewe, which now alone survives, is more difficult to account for, possibly it arose from a confusion with Flow (OE pa t flēow), with which this vb had in the 15th c come to coincide in the pa pple, or however the somewhat similar phenomenon in the vb slay, pa t slew, for which no parallel explanation can be given

With regard to the confusion between the verbs fly and flee, see Flee.]

The 1st word was first used in sense 1 by Kepler (Astron pars Optica 1604, written in 1604), his reason for the choice of the name is not stated, but it is conjectured that the optical sense 2, 'burning point of a lens or mirror' (which is easily derived from the 1st sense) must have been already in existence, this would account for Kepler's use, as the 'burning point' of a focus of a parabolic mirror is situate at the geometrical 'focus' of its curvature Sense 4 is from medical Latin In all senses cf Fr foyer —L focārium* f focus]

1 Geom a In plane geometry One of the points from which the distances to any point of a given curve are connected by a linear relation

Also defined as a point from which a pair of isotropic tangents can be drawn to a curve, or as the intersection of tangents from each pair of points in the line at infinity meets a co planar circle (For definitions specially relating to the foci of a conic, see quots 1881 and 1893)

Fold, var. form of Foud.

-fold, suffix (Oe. -feald, Northumb. -fald, ME. fald, -fold), corresponds to OFris., OS. fald (Du. -voud), OHG. -falt (MHG. -valt, mod. Ger. -falt), ON. -faldr (Sw. fald, Da. -fold), Goth. -falps, cognate with Fold v.[1], and with the equivalent Gr. -πλατος, -πλασιος, also, more remotely, with Gr. -πλο- in ἁπλόος single, διπλόος double (= L. duplus), and probably with the L. (sim-, du-, tri-) plex. Like the Gr. and L. equivalents, the Teut. suffix is appended to cardinal numerals (and adjs. meaning 'many'), forming adjs. of which the primary sense is 'folded in two, three, four, etc.,' or 'plaited of two, three, four, etc. strands' (cf. 'a threefold cord'), but which serve also and chiefly as arithmetical multiplicatives. The Oe. forms, twi-, twiva, twifeald, þrifeald, fyþerfeald, which retain the combining form of the cardinal inherited from O.Teut., were superseded in early Me. by new formations on the analogy of fivefold, etc., where the cardinal has the normal form.

The adjs. were already in O.E. used also in the neut. (e.g. Þrifeald threefold), three times as much and as adv. (= doubly, triply, etc.), and these uses still continue. In O.E. the adverbial notion was also expressed by phrases like be fiftefealdum or manig fealdum, in later Eng. by five-fold, by manyfold. The introduction of the modern synonyms double and treble or triple, to which were after wards added the adapted Latin quadruple, quintuple, etc., has considerably narrowed the use of the derivatives in -fold; indeed the latter seem to be (in many dialects) no longer current among illiterate speech. The educated use the strictly multiplicative sense survives chiefly in the adv. and quasi-sb., and with reference to somewhat large numbers ('He has repaid me tenfold', 'that is a thousandfold worse'), the adjs. express rather a plurality of things more or less different, than mere quantitative multiplication of 'a double charm' with 'a two fold charm'.

In M.E. a few new and unanalogical compounds were formed with the suffix, as thick-fold (= frequent, -ly), double-fold, but these did not survive into the modern period. Of the nonce combinations, formed by attaching -fold to indefinite numerals, interrogatives, and the like, the following quots. afford examples.

†Fo'lkland. Obs exc Hist A term of OE law, designating land held by a certain kind of tenure, opposed to BOOKLAND

As to the nature of the antithesis between folkland and bookland there has been many a conjecture. Since the publication of Allen's Inquiry into the Growth of the Royal Prerogative, 1830, the prevailing view has been that folkland was land belonging to the state, which the king on the witan might grant to a person for his life, but which did not descend to heirs, while bookland was land held by charter or deed. But in the Edg. Hist. Rev. VIII. (1893) Prof. Vinogradoff has forcibly argued that folkland was simply land heritable by folkright or common law, while the estate in bookland was conferred by charter or deed, and could be alienated freely.

ALLEN Inq. Royal Prerog. (1849) 135 Folcland, as the word imports, was the land of the folk or people. It was the property of the community. It might be occupied in common, or possessed in severalty, and, in the latter case, it was probably parcelled out by lot. ... It was the allodium. But while it continued to be folcland, it could not be alienated in perpetuity, and therefore, on the expiration of the term for which it had been granted, it reverted to the community, and was again distributed by the same authority. 1874 J. RICHARD GREEN Conq. (1876) IV. xvii. 24 The folkland, the common land of the nation, was now (1066 ?) changed, fully and for ever, into terra Regis, the land of the King.

2. Billiards. A stroke which causes the player's ball to roll on after the object-ball which it has set in motion. Called also follow stroke, and following stroke. Also, the impulse given to the ball by such a stroke.

Billiards* 58 The Follow stroke. Ibid. 59 The 'follow' can also be executed with the cue delivered as far as one fourth below centre.

3. Follow on. Cricket The act of 'following on' (see FOLLOW v. 19 d), also applied to the innings itself. Also simply follow.

[The two OE. types, folʒian (o- stem) and fylgan (-jo- stem), are, as is usual in similar pairs of conjugational variants, representatives of an O Teut. vb. of the -ʒan class, cf. OFris. folga, folsa, fulta, OS. folgôn (Du volgen), OHG. folgên (MHG. volgen, mod. Ger folgen), ON. fylgja (Da. følge, Sw. följa), not recorded in Goth. Beside these forms, several of the Teut. langs. have synonymous and phonetically resembling words which are compounds of GANG and GO vbs., OE. has fulgangan, pa. t. ful ēode (from ēode, serving as pa. t. of gān) = OS. fulgangan, OHG. folle gân. The most natural explanation of these parallel forms is that the apparently simple vb. was originally a compound or a phrasal combination. The first element occurs in OE. fylstan, fullwstan, OHG. follerstên to help, succour, minister to (cf. Goth. lastjan to follow), OHG. follazuohan to assist, support (= OE. fullʒon*, whence fulstam, fultum assistance), Goth. fullafahjan to worship, serve, minister to the needs of. In these cases the prefix seems to add to the sense of the simple vb. the notion of doing something by way of service to another (so that sense 3 of the present vb. is probably nearest to the original meaning). It is on formal grounds probable that the prefix is identical with FULL, its function in the above-cited instances is perh. due to the circumstance that in some vbs. compounded with it the primary sense of 'satisfying' developed into the cognate sense of 'ministering to', 'serving'.]

5 A popular name for any costly structure considered to have shown folly in the builder

R Wendover says that when (in 1248) a castle which Hubert de Burgh had begun to build, near the Welsh border, had to be razed to the ground on account of a treaty concluded with the Welsh, much amusement was excited by the recollection that Hubert had given to the building on its foundation the name of Hubert's Folly (Stultitiam Huberti) It was remarked that he had shown himself a true prophet Probably the word used by Hubert was le Folie, the original meaning seems to have been not stultitia, but 'delight', 'favourite abode Many houses in France still bear the name La Folie, and there is some evidence that 'the Folly' was as late as the present century used in some parts of England for a public pleasure garden or the like

2 The device of a 'fool's cap' used as a watermark for paper.

It has been asserted that the fool's cap mark was introduced by Sir John Spielmann or Spilman, a German who built a paper-mill at Dartford in 1580, but we have failed to find any trustworthy authority for this statement. The Brit. Mus. copy of Rushworth's Hist. Coll. (1659) is marked with this device. The watermark called by Sotheby (Princ. III.) a 'fool's cap', and said by him to occur in some copies of Caxton's Golden Legend, seems not to be correctly so called. The catalogue of the Caxton Exhibition (1877) states that examples of the fool's cap, dating from 1479, are found in a German collection there exhibited. There is no foundation for the often repeated story that the Rump Parliament ordered a fool's cap to be substituted for the royal arms on the watermark of the paper used for the journals of the House.

1795 DENNE in Archæologia XII. 121 The Fool's cap is not in either the Paston Letters or Mr. Ord's Plates. The date of that device in Mr. Fisher's is as late as 1661.

Another formation on this stem appears in OS fur, furi, OHG. furi (MHG vur, mod Ger für) prep., for, ON fyr(r) (Da for, Sw för) adv and prep , before, for

The use of for as a conj has not been found earlier than the 12th c. The older lang supplied the place of the conj by locutions in which for prep governed a neuter demonstrative pronoun followed by a relative particle for ðon ðe, for ðy ðe, etc. (see FOR-THON, FOR-THY) The conjunctional use of for = for ðon ðe may be explained either as an extension of the functions of the prep, to govern a noun-sentence, or as an ellipsis

In OI for and fore seem to have been used indiscriminately as preps , in ME they were gradually differentiated]

For-, pref[1] Also 1 fær-, 3 Orm forr-, 3–4 south. vor-, ver-, 4 fur-, 6–7 fore- [OE for-, fær- = OFris for-, far-, OS for-, far- (Du ver-), OHG far-, fir-, fer- (MHG and mod G ver-), ON for- (Sw för-, Da. for-); the ON fyrer- (see Fore- pref.) though formally distinct, often corresponds in use with this prefix The OE form (like the other forms quoted) seems to represent (with obscured vowel due to absence of stress) the three OTeut prefixes for-*, fra-, fur- (Goth fair-, fra-, fair-), which correspond formally to Gr περι-, προ-, παρα-, representing various ablaut-grades of the Aryan root pr-* see For and Fore. Functionally, the three prefixes do not seem to be clearly distinguished even in Gothic, but in most cases when a vb with OE for- or Ger. ver- has a Goth equivalent, the prefix appears as fra-, which seems to have been orig its stressed form cf. the two OE forms fra cod and forcũ ð (see For-couth), which are believed to be accentual variants of the representative of pre-Teut. progntо-*, despicable

From the predominant meaning of the root, it may be inferred that the primary notion expressed by the prefix is that of 'forward, forth'. The various uses in the Teut langs may be plausibly explained as originating from this, though the exact process of their development is in many points uncertain see Grimm's Deutscher Wb. s v. ver. The vbs formed with this prefix often correspond in signification to Gr. vbs. formed with one or other of the cognate prefixes περι-, προ-, παρα-, and to Lat. vbs. with per- or pro-]

A prefix used to form verbs and adjs, primarily occurring in OE. words of Com. Teut. or WGer. origin, but employed in the formation of new words down to the beginning of the mod.Eng. period, it is now entirely obsolete. Its various functions are enumerated below. The words here explained and illustrated are all obsolete; the surviving words formed with the prefix, and those obsolete ones which require extended treatment, are given as main words in their alphabetical place.

Fore, obs pa. t. of Fare

Fore-, prefix In OE. the adv Fore (like its equivalent in various other Teut langs.) was used as a prefix (1) to verbs, giving the additional sense of 'before' (either in time, position, order, or rank), and (2) to sbs either forming designations of objects or parts of objects occupying a front position, or expressing anteriority in time (Cf OE forecweban, Goth fauraqiþan, OHG foraquedan to predict, OE foregangan, Goth fauragagggan to precede, OE foretōð, Ger vorzahn front tooth, etc.) The prefix has through all stages of the language continued to be a living formative in all its uses. The principal combinations are in this work treated as Main words in their alphabetical place, those which are of merely occasional use, or self explanatory, are enumerated in this article

I In verbs, ppl. adjs, agent-nouns and nouns of action (Stress on the verb)

1 With the sense 'in front', as in foregird, -lie, -lift (all Obs or arch) Also in agent-nouns, as †foresprus ver*, Forerunner, Forewaiker

1620 Holland Camden's Brit. I 791 Severus 'foregirded and vnited Britain with a wall to sea. 1590 Spenser F. V, II ix 95 His 'fore spurrer

2 = 'Beforehand', 'previously', 'in advance'

Formerly, esp. in 16–17th c., the prefix was used with any vb to which it was desired to give this additional meaning The number of recorded combinations of this kind is therefore enormous, and only a selection of them can here be given. Now, however, the use of the prefix, except in established combinations such as foresee, foretell, or in new combinations closely analogous to these, is felt to be somewhat archaistic or affected, in ordinary prose usage the meaning is expressed by the addition of an adverb, or (in verbs of obvious Lat. or Romance origin) by the prefix pre-

This use of form (Aristotle's μορφή or εἶδος) and matter (ὕλη) is a metaphorical extension of their popular use In ordinary speech, a portion of matter, stuff, or material, becomes a 'thing' by virtue of having a particular 'form' or shape, by altering the form, the matter remaining un changed, we make a new 'thing' This language, primarily applied only to objects of sense, was in philosophical use extended to objects of thought: every 'thing' or entity was viewed as consisting of two elements, its form by virtue of which it was distinct from all others, and its matter which it had in common with others

D Forth- in composition In OE. and ME. the combinations of forth adv with vbs are hardly to be considered compound words, whether the adv precedes or follows the vb depends on euphonic or other conditions which do not affect the sense The agent nouns, nouns of action, and ppl. adjs. corresponding to these verbal locutions were formed by prefixing forth to the verbal noun or adj. corresponding to the verb In mod. Eng. compound vbs formed with forth- are rare, but forth- is often used as a prefix in the formation of nouns of agent and action, and ppl. adjs corresponding to the verbal phrases (compound verbs in sense but not in form) in which the adv follows the verb More frequently, however, the agent noun, etc. is followed by the adv., thus we have a setter forth, but forthsetter* is app. not recorded For the formation of ppl. adjs. the prefix is the only means available, and in poetry from Pope onwards it is very common in pres. ppples

In some OE. and ME. words, forth appears as a substitute for Fore- see Forthfather, Forthward, Forthwith.

The more important compounds of forth- will be treated in their alphabetical place as Main words, those enumerated in this article are nonce-words or of rare occurrence
